London School of Architecture _ (Un)Building 2023-24

About the course...

(Un)Building is a bold programme for 13- to 16-year olds developed by the London School of Architecture (LSA) in collaboration with the RIBA and LIFT (Leading Inclusive Futures Through Technology) as part of the National Saturday Club programme. A free 20-week course for young people in architecture and design, it will be delivered on Saturday afternoons (2pm to 5pm) from the 4 November 2023 to the 11 May 2024 at the London School of Architecture in Dalston and other locations across the city.

The National Saturday Club offers young people a unique opportunity to explore subjects they love for free, to discover new talents, meet new people, and explore future study and career possibilities. In addition, Club members will participate in National Saturday Club Masterclasses with leading industry professionals, the Summer Show where Saturday Clubs nationwide exhibit their work in a public exhibition, and a Graduation Ceremony for Club members to celebrate their achievements.

(Un)Building 2023-24 curriculum centres on collaboration and project-oriented learning, with a focus on ecology and site-specific design. Working in groups, students are challenged to design and improve the existing 'Cumberland Square Garden', adjacent to the LSA's new home in Dalston.

Working with a wide range of experts within the built environment and local communities, students are encouraged to look to find inspiration in the site's context, their own experiences as well as cultural traditions that have been passed down through generations. This course hopes to inspire young people to explore and develop resilient forms of space-making.
